Cardinal Creek Farms was previously the Heisler Dairy Farm. Rolland and Gina added a walnut grove of 300 plus black walnut trees. The nuts from these trees are occasionally harvested as well for seed. They also have reconfigured the barns, added a Morton barn, and a house in the late 90’s. Recently, they have added irrigation to their fields. Rolland and Gina take most pride in watching the walnut grove throughout the seasons and seeing the growth throughout the years. Purdue hybrids were planted in 1997 that were just 18 inches tall. Originally, 360 trees were planted, but they have thinned just a little bit. Today, the trees are over 60 feet tall and provide habitat and shelter to wildlife as well as shade and erosion control to a creek bottom area. A lasting memory or experience that Rolland and Gina look back on is the life they’ve built together on the farm with the help of family associates and it has been priceless to them.
