Generations: 2 generations have operated the farm since purchased from the original owner

The large barn on the property was once located on the other side of the Maumee River and was taken apart piece by piece and reconstructed in the current location. Additionally, it is believed that trees from Johnny Appleseed were once along the river bank on the property. The family takes pride in being environmental stewards and practice responsible production techniques with the integration of cover crops as an example. A lasting memory or experience of this farm were numerous camp outs as kids on the property by the river. They now enjoy kayak trips.
